FILM STUDIES

1st in the Russell Group in the National Student Survey 2016

100% satisfaction in NSS 2016 in Cinematics and Photography category, 1st for Overall Satisfaction and 1st in Russell Group¹

World-class film research resources, including The Bill Douglas Cinema Museum (the largest university library collection in the UK)

Distinctive international approach to film analysis, history and theory

Vibrant programme of events, including writers, filmmakers and others from the creative industries

Based in one of the leading English departments in the UK, with major strengths in both teaching and research, the dedicated and supportive Film Studies team have a breadth of expertise across American, Asian, European and African cinemas from the 19th century to the present day.

As a student of Film Studies you will gain a rich and comprehensive knowledge of film as a cultural, social, industrial and global phenomenon. You will be equipped with the skills and concepts to enable you to understand how and why cinema developed as it did and how new moving image forms are shaping and defining film in the 21st century.

You will be taught by highly qualified and experienced staff, with a commitment to research-inspired teaching. Your studies will encompass the distinctive features and contexts of national and transnational film genres, movements and styles, from German expressionism to contemporary American independent cinema. You will explore the aesthetics and technologies of the moving image, from pre and silent cinema, through Hollywood classics, the special effects of blockbusters and the forms of avant-garde film, as well as the features of cross-cultural cinema and contemporary digital screen media. Concepts such as cinematic space, place and time and questions of gender, sexuality and identity will be covered and you will gain an understanding of the interaction between different film making contexts and industries and the directors, filmmakers and stars that worked in them.

Throughout your studies, you will also have access to outstanding resources, including the extensive holdings of The Bill Douglas Cinema Museum, the largest library on the moving image in any British university. For more details see www.exeter.ac.uk/bdc

DEGREE PROGRAMMES

Our Film Studies programmes offer you a significant range of choices in your path of study. The Single Honours programme allows you to specialise in the study of cinema; the modules on offer cover a diverse range of films and critical and theoretical approaches. The Combined Honours programmes allow you to divide your time 50:50 between the study of film and another subject area, with options available in English and Modern Languages.

How your degree is structured

The degrees are divided into compulsory and optional modules, which gives you the flexibility to structure your degree according to your specific interests. Individual modules are worth 15 or 30 credits each. Full-time undergraduates need to take 120 credits in each year. If you are a Combined Honours student you will take modules worth 60 credits in Film Studies and 60 credits from your other subject in each year.

For up-to-date details of all our programmes and modules, please check www.exeter.ac.uk/ug/film

Single Honours

BA Film Studies

The Single Honours programme offers the opportunity to study an exciting range of films from different periods and international contexts; you will watch films from American, European, Asian and African cinemas. You will gain a deep knowledge of film as a cultural, social, industrial and global phenomenon and establish a familiarity with different conceptual and theoretical approaches to film. The spectrum of films studied will equip you to understand the complex histories of the medium as well as how important issues of cultural difference are raised through cinema, giving you the tools and vocabulary to take a questioning attitude to your own culture. We encourage you to make the most of the facilities available to broaden and enhance your study of film, not just on campus but also through the lively film culture (festivals, art-house cinema, media facilities) in the city itself.

The first year of study familiarises you with the specialised language used in the analysis of film and the way to study film as a visual and aural art form. It gives you an introduction to the most important movements and moments in cinema history, provides an introduction to some basic areas of film theory, and begins to engage with the cross-cultural and transnational exchanges between world cinemas. In the second year, you will study the theoretical aspects of time and place in film and the history of American cinema. You will also be able to choose a module option on European cinema, cinema adaptations or from a range of other modules.

The third year allows you to pursue your own interests by choosing from an array of specialist modules. You will also complete a Dissertation. You can choose between a written dissertation, or a Creative Film dissertation which allows you to make a short film or video essay.

For full details on degree structure and module selection and details, please refer to the modules section on page 5.

Combined Honours

BA English and Film Studies

The Combined Honours programme in English and Film Studies provides you with a firm foundation in the study of literature and film. You will develop your familiarity with a historically and nationally diverse range of films and literary texts and equip yourself with the critical tools and vocabulary to analyse them thoughtfully and in depth. Your time will be equally divided between studying literature and film and you will choose from a wide range of innovative module choices, such as Imperial Encounters: the Victorians and their World or Writing the Short Film. The stimulating range of modules ensures that you can choose a coherent programme of study to match your developing interests, with interdisciplinary opportunities between literary and visual cultural texts.

The first year introduces you to the specialised language used in the analysis of film and to important theories and methods of film analysis. You will also study aspects of literary history and choose from a selection of optional modules. In the second year you will study the history of American cinema alongside your choice of optional modules in film, literature and creative writing. The third year allows you to choose from a wide array of specialist modules on topics such as American Independent Cinema, Surrealism and Its Legacies; Beyond Sex and the City: Becoming a Woman in Western Cinema. You will choose two Film modules, an option in English Literature or Creative Writing and you will also write a dissertation on a topic of your choice. In most years there are over thirty-five options to choose from in Film, English Literature and Creative Writing.

For full details on degree structure and module selection and details, please refer to the modules section.

For further details see: www.exeter.ac.uk/ug/film

BA Film Studies and Modern Languages

This degree enables you to combine a solid foundation in Film Studies with the study of a choice of languages and cultures, namely Chinese, French, German, Italian, Portuguese, Russian or Spanish.

This four-year programme enables you to experience a new culture and learning environment through a third year at one of our international partner universities or in approved paid or voluntary employment.

The first year will introduce you to the specialised terminology used in the analysis of film and the key concepts relating to cinema and the nation. You will also study a compulsory language module and two modules on aspects of the foreign language culture. In the second year you will study one core module that explores questions of space, time and identity in film as well as one optional module in Film Studies. From your selected language you will study one compulsory language module and two modules on aspects of the foreign language culture other than film, for example history, literature, the visual arts or linguistics.

Your third year will be spent abroad. There are a range of opportunities for work and study, which include studying at one of our many international partner institutions. In your final year you will study two optional Film Studies modules, one compulsory language module and two modules on aspects of the foreign language culture other than film (as above).

For full details on the degree structure, module selection and details, please refer to the modules section.

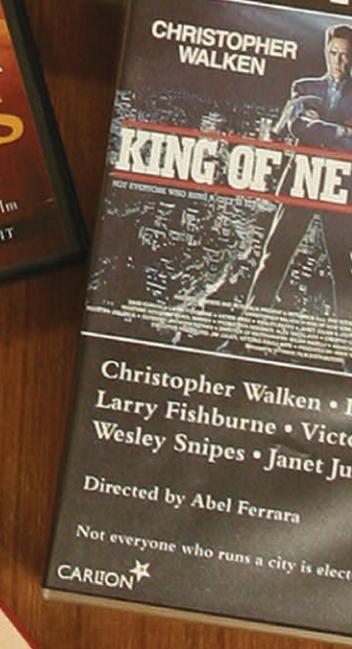

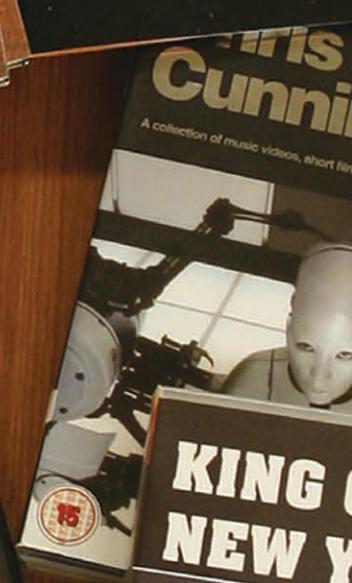

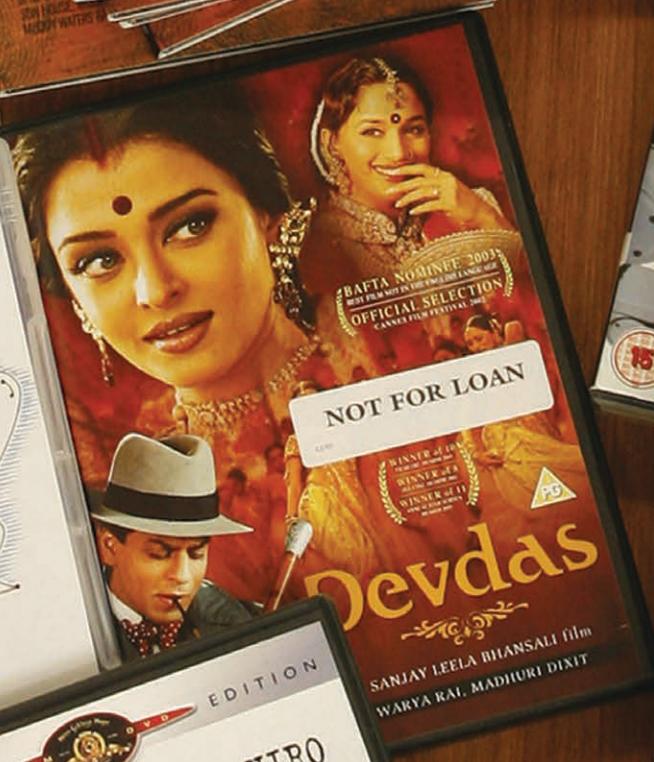

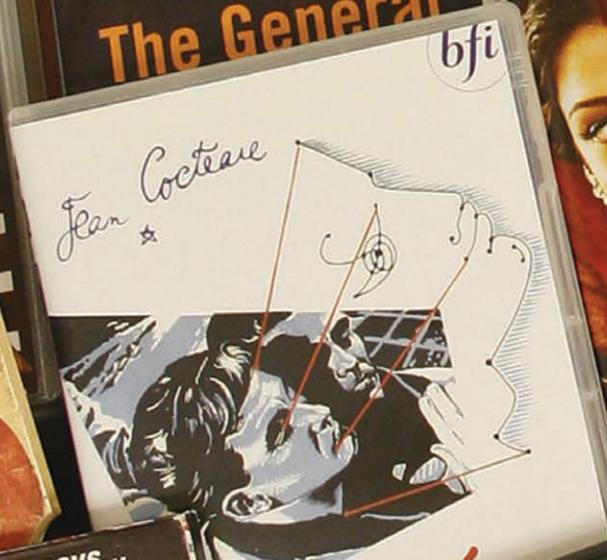

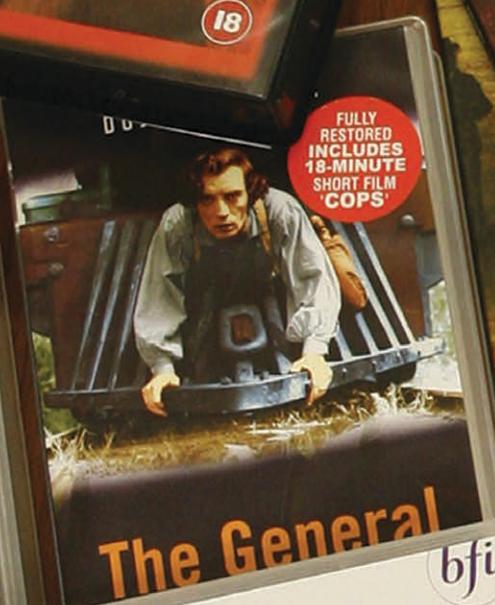

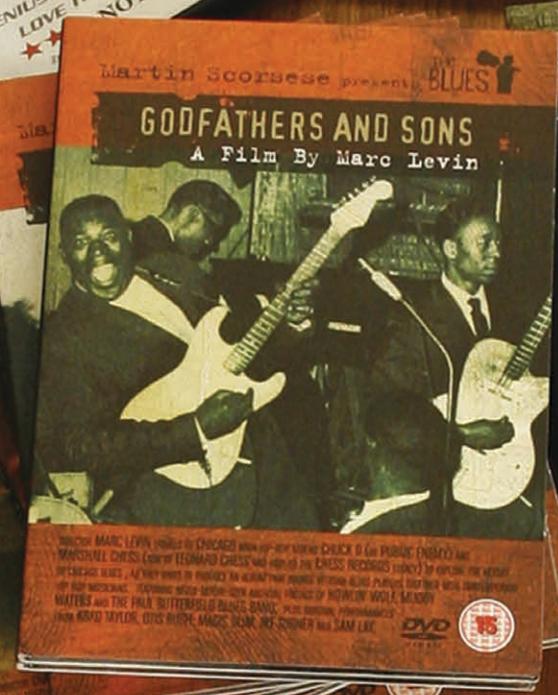

Details of the language modules can be found at www.exeter.ac.uk/ug/languages

Flexible Combined Honours

Our innovative Combined Honours scheme enables you to combine modules from a number of different fields of study not otherwise available through an existing Combined Honours programme. You can combine Film Studies with up to two other subjects from an extensive list. Throughout your degree you will be given regular support to help you choose the most appropriate pathway for you. Further information and the full list of available subjects can be found at www.exeter.ac.uk/ug/flexible

Year 1

Introduction to Film Analysis

This module gives you detailed practice in developing and using a vocabulary with which to analyse and interpret how films work. You'll study a number of films in detail, investigating the roles of editing, framing, sound and narrative structures. The module will then introduce you to the detailed study of a single film.

Introduction to Film History

This module provides an outline history of film from the 1890s to the 1960s. Particular attention will be paid to the international nature of film as well as to a number of key developments, movements and trends in countries such as Britain, Italy, France, Japan and Germany.

Major Debates in Film Theory

This module introduces you to a series of major debates in film theory, from realism and digital cinema to authorship, genre and stars. You will become familiar with these theoretical approaches, to situate them in the broader development of film studies as an academic discipline. You will also be able to demonstrate how these theories might be applied to analyse film texts in new and different ways.

Transnational Cinemas

This module introduces key concepts relating to cinema and the nation, with an emphasis on transnational filmmaking. It begins by rethinking the concept of 'national cinema' and goes on to introduce concepts such as 'transnational cinemas', 'world cinemas' and 'accented cinema', focusing on issues of border-crossing, diasporas and cross-cultural negotiations in terms of exhibition and distribution.

Adaptation: Text, Image, Culture

The process of adapting material from literary forms, such as scripts, short stories, novels and plays into film, television and other screen media is one of the oldest, most dominant and most ubiquitous strategies in the creative industries. By analysing a wide range of adaptations in different forms you will be able to understand the rich and complex relationships between textual and visual media at distinct historical moments and in specific cultural contexts. This module offers you the opportunity to understand adaptation as a creative process and adaptations as cultural products.

Cinescapes: Time, Space and Identity

This module builds on some of the debates addressed in Major Debates in Film Theory. It uses films from a variety of geographical, cultural and historical locations as a means of exploring the complex relationship between film theory and film practice. It draws on a series of philosophical concepts and theoretical debates that have emerged as key areas of enquiry in film studies. It uses these theoretical approaches to analyse questions of space and setting; the representation of time and its relationship to memory and history; and issues of ethnicity, sexuality, gender and the body.

European Film Noir

This module offers a rich insight into the development of European film noir and examines the historical development and national specificity of noir in three national cinemas: Germany, France and Britain. It also analyses the ways in which European film noirs have been profoundly affected, in various ways, by American film noir in a complex two-way process that ranges from imitation, to dazzling originality, to complex hybridity. The module will also re-examine classical Hollywood film noir taking into account its own European genealogy, asking to what extent American film noir itself can be seen as part of a European tradition and inheritance.

Shots in the Dark

This module investigates the development of American film, ranging across the diverse formations that have enabled it to become an immensely popular and influential source for both art and entertainment. You'll look closely at Hollywood, but also consider the important realms of independent filmmaking and art cinema, which have broadened the scope of cinematic innovation and representation.

Year 3

American Independent Film

This module examines the practice of American independent filmmaking as it has developed in recent decades. In particular it interrogates the meaning of independence as an aesthetic, institutional and political category of filmmaking practice; analyses some of the key films that have influenced the aesthetic development and critical reception of independent filmmaking; and explores the range of aesthetic and narrative possibilities offered by the commercial and cultural parameters of independent filmmaking practice.

Beyond Sex and the City: Becoming a Woman in Western Cinema

This module examines a range of contemporary films from American and European popular and art-house cinema that explore different aspects of growing up female in contemporary Western society. It focuses on how contemporary postfeminist culture shapes our expectations of girls and girlhood as a crucible for both anxiety about and celebration of girls' progress and emancipation.

Cityscapes

This is a module about the mediated city from 1880-2000. You will consider the cities of London, Paris, Berlin, New York and LA, exploring the diverse ways in which they are represented in literature, modern art, film and TV.

Diasporic Cinemas

The term diaspora refers to the displacement of an ethnic group of people from a shared homeland. Since the 1980s, as developing world and post-colonial filmmakers have become increasingly visible in the West, diasporic cinema has emerged as a dynamic and contested area of research. On this module you will study a variety of key films that fall under the rubric of diasporic cinema.

Film Studies Dissertation

The dissertation is an independent research project, which enables you to operate autonomously and responsibly, and take a positive and active role in your learning. You will plan and produce a sustained piece of critical work that highlights the skills you have learnt over the course of your degree programme, incorporating a range of research methods and methodologies. You will receive guidance from a supervisor and receive support through a series of workshops and lectures.

Something to See: War and Visual Media

This module investigates the links between visual media and industrialised warfare. You will learn about the role played by media industries and technologies, not only in how war is represented, but also fought and experienced. We will cover conflicts ranging from the Crimean War to the current conflict against ISIS and the war in Afghanistan.

Surrealism and Its Legacies

From its inception in Paris in the 1920s to contemporary works of art, film and literature, Surrealism has revolutionized the ways in which the ordinary world can be imagined and represented artistically. This module investigates the history of Surrealism, tracing its impact and longevity within the modernist avant-garde and into popular culture; as well as the bold aesthetic choices made by its key practitioners and followers. The second half of the module will concentrate on a range of international films that have been influenced by Surrealism.

LEARNING AND TEACHING

We use a variety of learning and teaching methods including lectures, seminars, screenings, student study groups, web and IT resources. All of our modules centre the learning experience on seminars, involving groups of between 10 and 20 students, typically running for two hours. Many modules are supported by weekly 50-minute lectures. Students often prepare for seminars by getting involved with student study groups, which encourage collaboration and team working.

Typical contact time with academic staff is a minimum of 10 hours per week in your first year, on top of which you are expected to attend other activities such as study groups, workshop activities and film screenings. Students studying Film Studies and a Modern Language may have a few extra hours, as language study is necessarily intensive. Most of your work will be done in groups and self-directed study: viewing and reading module material, writing essays or preparing material for seminar presentations. You should expect your total workload to average about 40 hours per week during term time.

We are actively engaged in introducing new methods of learning and teaching, including increasing use of interactive computer-based approaches to learning through our virtual learning environment, where the details of all modules are stored in an easily navigable website. Students can access detailed information about modules and interact with their peers and lecturers through activities such as discussion forums.

We are committed to your academic development. Through seminar work you will be trained in skills of critical analysis and learn to develop evidenced-based arguments. We foster your research skills through training in the use of library-based or electronic resources to research a topic. We offer detailed feedback and essays which can be discussed on a one-to-one basis with the tutor who has marked them. Study Skills tutors are also available within the department to work on specific areas in written work and assessment.

Facilities

Exeter has unique resources which make it ideally positioned to support the study of film. The Bill Douglas Cinema Museum holds a wide-ranging collection of more than 70,000 film related artefacts. The collection is available for all students to use as a research and study resource. The diverse collection includes objects relating to the history of the moving image, such as optical toys, magic lantern slides and a Lumière cinematograph; film publicity such as posters from the Hollywood era to contemporary film; material on film stars such as Charlie Chaplin, Marilyn Monroe and Audrey Hepburn; and material on animation, particularly Disney films. The holdings also include the papers of British producer Gavrik Losey, the director and producer Don Boyd and the producer James Mackay which include papers that relate to the work of Derek Jarman. Many of our film modules exploit these resources, giving students a highly distinctive and valuable experience of studying and researching film using primary materials, documents and artefacts.

Our audio-visual collection in the University library comprises over 12,000 films on DVD and video, in addition to books about and recordings of American music of all kinds.

Recent investment in our learning spaces has ensured that lectures, screening and seminars take advantage of multimedia equipment.

Research-inspired teaching

Teaching that is inspired by research ensures lectures are up-to-date and relevant; you will benefit from access to the latest thinking, equipment and resources. All staff teach second and third year options that are linked to their own interests which include areas such as: film history; adaptation; gender studies; issues of identity; European, Asian and American cinema and urban space in the cinema. All staff are members of the Centre for Interdisciplinary Film Research (CIFR) which host talks with visiting speakers and our own staff about various research projects, to which all are welcome. CIFR also organises Career focused events for film students, which allows you to meet alumni, learn about their jobs and to network.

Film Staff also participate in Screen Talks in conjunction with the Exeter Picturehouse. Currently taking place every other Monday in term time, this gives you the chance to hear staff introduce films they are passionate about, watch them on the big screen, and then discuss them afterwards in the bar.

Academic support

From the beginning of your degree you will benefit from a focus on your personal and professional development alongside your academic performance. You will be supported by a personal tutor throughout your degree, as well as a range of study skills and employability training. You will also learn to work flexibly and creatively with others and engage in debate, as well as exercising

My course so far has been fascinating. I have discovered new topics and films I would never have thought of looking at. I like the various combinations of assessment including coursework and exams and the lecturers are really supportive, always happy to help whenever I need it. The University offers so much other support too, like The Bill Douglas Cinema Museum which I have used for research on the course and for coursework. Having never come across anything like the museum before, the range of artefacts stored in Exeter is amazing and they really add to your understanding of topics.

independent thought to become an effective independent learner.

There are also a number of services on campus where you can get advice and information, including the Students' Guild Advice Unit. You can find further information about all the services in the University's undergraduate prospectus or online at www.exeter.ac.uk/undergraduate

Assessment

You will be assessed by a combination of exams, essays, presentations and sequence analyses (the detailed analysis of film clips). Your first year does not count towards your final degree classification, but you do have to pass it in order to progress. In order to be eligible for 'with Study Abroad' programmes you will need to attain an average of 60 per cent or more in your first year. The assessments in the second year, year abroad (if applicable) and final year will contribute to your final degree classification.

Further details are available on our website at www.exeter.ac.uk/ug/film

Taking modules outside of your programme

Depending on your programme you may take up to 30 credits in another subject (subject to academic approval and timetabling), for instance a language or business module, to develop career-related skills or widen your intellectual horizons. If you achieve at least 60 credits in a language via our Foreign Language Centre you may be able to have the words 'with proficiency in' and the language added to your degree title. Further details about the FLC can be found at www.exeter.ac.uk/flc

Employment experience in the UK or abroad

Spending up to a year carrying out a graduate-level work placement or placements as part of your degree programme is an invaluable opportunity. This unlocks a world of experience, allowing you to develop essential employability and interpersonal skills that relate to your degree and future career. You will take full responsibility for finding and organising your placement (either in the UK or abroad), with preparation, support and approval from the University. This is a great way to demonstrate to employers your adaptability, cultural awareness, independence and resourcefulness.

Study Abroad

Studying for your degree at Exeter offers you the exciting possibility of spending up to a year abroad. You could learn a new language and experience different cultures, become more self-confident and widen your circle of friends. You could also get the chance to specialise in areas that are not available in Exeter, and when it comes to a career, your skills and knowledge of another country will prove invaluable to many employers. For more information, please visit www.exeter.ac.uk/ug/studyabroad

CAREERS

A degree in Film Studies will enable you to develop a broad range of highly desirable skills for the workplace. Your degree will enable you to pursue careers in a diverse range of sectors including education, publishing, TV and film, marketing, law and business. Some students choose to progress to postgraduate study in areas such as film, journalism, literature, creative writing and marketing.

Throughout your degree, you will develop an informed, critical and creative approach. Alongside strong oral and written communication skills, you will gain the ability to manage your time and workload effectively, work well as part of a team or independently, be flexible when faced with new situations and have strong analytical skills. Additionally, choosing Film Studies with a language opens doors to international opportunities in Europe and Latin America.

Many students from the department take part in the Exeter Award and the Exeter Leaders Award. These schemes encourage you to participate in careers-related workshops, skills events, volunteering and employment which will contribute to your career decision-making skills and success in the employment market.

Exeter has an excellent reputation with graduate recruiters; our students and graduates compete very successfully in the employment market. Many employers target the University when recruiting new graduates.
