

PJMH

Now in its third year, The Postgraduate Journal of Medical Humanities showcases some of the varied and exciting research being carried out within the vibrant field of the medical humanities at present.

This edition marks a special collaboration between the PJMH and the Society of the Social History of Medicine. On 26-28 August 2015 postgraduates from across the world met at Ross Priory on the edge of Loch Lomond to participate in the SSHM Postgraduate Career Development Workshop and Conference on the theme of 'Health History in Action'. The articles published here offer just a small glimpse into the exciting new research showcased at this event. Whilst the articles all fall within the remit of medical history, the interdisciplinary approaches used and the range of topics covered within these pieces demonstrates the continued vitality of this field and the medical humanities more broadly.

We would like to thank all of those involved in bringing this edition of the journal to fruition, including the internal review team and the external editors who have been so generous with both their time and expertise. We are also hugely grateful to the authors for contributing such interesting and insightful work to the journal.

As we hand over to a new editorial team we'd like to thank all of the contributors that have helped establish the PJMH over the last 3 years. It has gone from strength to strength due to their hard work, and we look forward to seeing it flourish even further in the future.
