

PJMH

This year's Postgraduate Journal of Medical Humanities continues the tradition of the international and interdisciplinary approach established in the previous years. The articles featured in the 2018/2019 issue discuss a broad range of topics, including eighteenth-century perceptions of madness, the political intricacies of the early-twentieth-century scientific biography as well as information on new publications in the field of medical humanities education and the published proceedings of medical humanities conferences abroad.

Bringing this journal together would not have been possible without the hard work of the internal review team, as well as the constructive feedback of external reviewers. We would like to thank them for their willingness to dedicate their time and expertise to the project. We also wish to thank the contributing authors themselves; we're grateful to be able to share your exciting research and hope our readers will enjoy it as much as we did.

Editors: Ana Tomcic (University of Exeter) and Louise Benson James (University of Bristol)