Home for me is about feeling safe and having a space to share with my family. My stepdaughter lives with us some of the time, and it is important that she feels it is her space too.

What makes a house a home to me is finding a place that is comfortable, safe and restful - that would be a refuge and a haven to retire to after a long day outside. It means filling the space with personal items and knick-knacks that represent who you are such that the space becomes transformed from an impersonal dwelling to a home that is infused with personality and cosiness.

A home is a destination. It's where you come back to after a long day of work. It's comfort and belonging. A home could be a building or it could be people. It could be a country, a town or a street.

The feeling of safety, comfort and acceptedness. You don't feel in danger.
